Props and a Number

Editor:

I wish to give props to John Hardin for his entertaining and thorough cover story regarding the Garberville Veterans Hall ("Closed," Oct. 20). I learned a lot I did not know about the history of our major local meeting place. One story he did not include was what we of the senior fitness exercise class did for years before the roof was last sealed.

That huge stockpot only recently got the bung hole and tubing out the window, making it brisk in the wintertime, BTW. Before that, a large pot sat there for years filling up with water with every rain. Sometimes it even overflowed and left water sitting on that quality oak flooring the vets had installed. We came in on Mondays and Thursdays and, at the close of exercise class, always checked the water level in the pot. If we believed it was likely to overflow before our next class, we climbed up on a chair and used a smaller bucket to bail water, walking it to the sink in the restroom. It was an unusual feat to tackle for a group of women over 65.

I also want to inform you and the community at large that, in addition to the Civic Club (50 max capacity), there is the Healy Senior Center (78 max capacity) on Briceland Road in Redway that is available for rent at reasonable rates for classes, weddings, parties, music events, dinners, club meetings, etc. The center cannot make up for the open space of the veterans hall, but it is an alternative with a parking lot and good street parking. Call 923-2399 to reserve a date.

Vote Allison!

Editor:

With the current situation at local nursing homes in Eureka becoming a polarization of issues all over this country

("The Case of the Missing $5 Million," Oct. 13), we need to focus our funds on what's important: the People.

Too much money is being spent on selling one's self, a reward for a vandalized sign of $1,000?! Why is it acceptable to offer a reward for childish pranks but not one for the majorly impacting closure of local skilled nursing facilities? I know what's more important to my candidates here in Eureka. While Austin Allison was out trying to bring attention to a huge crisis in our community, John Fullerton was putting out an APB for yard signs in which he may or may not involve the police.

To have the wherewithal to stand up for the old and less fortunate at 25 and not 63, speaks volumes. If Austin Allison is standing up for our senior citizens when he is far from retirement and John Fullerton is out getting local celebs to do radio advertisements for him, I can deduce whose priorities are in order.

Tiva Insolo, Eureka

Editor:

The Times-Standard supports John Fullerton; this is not surprising, the T-S is a corporation. Austin Allison supports the people and they support him; Austin is supported by unions and teachers, entrepreneurs and nurses, the "middle class." He supports a union that helped bring living wages to employees at St Joseph and he is not afraid to tackle large moneyed interests! He has the creativity to help Eureka lift its people off the bottom.

Austin Allison is a progressive that will break out of the old boy network and join Bernie as he gets the down ballot Democratic votes to be chair of the Budget Committee! Forward, Progressives!

Pat Kanzler, Eureka

Vote Fullerton!

Editor:

Recently the Greater Eureka Chamber of Commerce, the Humboldt Builders Exchange and the Eureka Times-Standard all endorsed me in the race for Eureka City Council.

Hundreds of individuals from liberals to conservatives, including recent members of the Humboldt Democratic Central Committee and the Republican Central Committee, have also endorsed me.

Why? Because good intentions aren't enough. Slogans and cliches are only empty words unless you have real experience, knowledge of the community and leadership skills to get things done.

My concern and knowledge about the homeless situation is not just a theoretical exercise but a problem that directly impacted my family for years and resulted in the death of my younger brother.

One of the things you can count on with me is that I listen to all points of view before casting any votes and I treat everyone with respect.

I would appreciate your support on Nov 8.

John Fullerton, Eureka

Measure F!

Editor:

I am writing this to endorse Measure F and encourage Arcata residents to join me in voting yes on this ballot measure. I sit on the Utility Users Tax Oversight Committee, and I can tell you that without this source of income, we would experience a significant decline in the effectiveness of our police department and a decline in the quality of our streets, roadways, bikeways and pedestrian facilities.

The Utility Users Tax contributes many hundreds of thousand dollars to these services. In fact, without these funds, the city would not be able to keep up with basic maintenance of our streets, let alone embark on improving them. The oversight committee was established when the Utility Users Tax was approved and those of us who serve on this committee can verify that the money collected goes toward public safety and transportation infrastructure.

Remember, a yes vote does not create a new tax; it simply extends this revenue source for another eight years. Please join me and cast a yes vote on Measure F,

Steve Cole, Arcata

Measure V!

Editor:

I noted with interest Ryan Sundberg's comments opposing Measure V because he thinks it wouldn't be fair to the new owners of a mobile home park if they couldn't impose unlimited rent increases. Sundberg chose to represent the 42 park owners instead of 1,500 families in Humboldt. It is especially interesting that his example is of a park owner that doesn't even live in Humboldt.

Frequently I hear that park residents should have done their due diligence before purchasing a manufactured home. May I suggest that the multi-million-dollar park owners outside of Humboldt should have done their due diligence? Did they not know that poor people can only give so much before their only recourse is to stand up and say, "Enough!"

Or perhaps they didn't know that Humboldt people still have empathy and care what happens to others. This is why I love Humboldt.

Patti Rose, McKinleyville

Editor:

Measure V on the November ballot is important not just as a sensible consideration, but also as a moral issue. It seeks to limit the amount of increase in rents for mobile home spaces. There comes a point, even in capitalism, where a distinction must be made between profit and excess. In a time where excess is frequently extolled as the epitome of success, it is imperative to remember that excess is what is destroying our society (viz; CEO pay packages of $30 million a year).

Local owners have come before the BOS and city councils and noted that they have, for years, limited their rental increases to something around 3 to 5 percent a year, whereas corporations frequently increase rents 15 percent or more. The fact that corporations are buying mobile home parks, even in areas with rent stabilization measures in place, indicates that they know there is ample profit to be made.

Larry Hourany, McKinleyville

Measure P!

Editor:

Politicians claiming Eureka's citywide elections provided, "a more responsive city council" are delusional.

Ignored for decades, residents suffered sewage contaminated homes, businesses, greenbelts and Humboldt Bay during crab season, resulting in fines from the California Water Board. Citizens' demands to repurpose blighted properties are disregarded, leaving our neighborhoods with increasing arson and vandalism that repels tourists, businesses and residents. Eureka's response to record-fatalities of pedestrians, cyclists and motorists is a campaign to "be more careful."

"There's no money" to effectively address public health, destitute families, safe streets, affordable housing and emergency services because the development industry bankrolls costly citywide elections, winning representatives who refuse to advocate for or enact sufficient regulations, fees, fines and ordinances for all construction long before the impacts become intractable.

Until we have publicly financed elections, Measure P will give every Eureka adult a fair shot at a council seat and begin placing the common good above industry greed.

George Clark, Eureka

Editor:

Vote no on Eureka's Measure P. This is the ballot measure proposing to take away your right to vote on all of the city council members in future elections. Three of the five current city council members voted to put this measure on the ballot under the guise of the possibility of a lawsuit for disenfranchising minority voters. Don't buy that. We are too small a city to divide and vote for only one council member.

We are a small city, not like the ones in the Bay Area or Southern California where these lawsuits are occurring. We currently have the best of both worlds, where a candidate needs to live in a ward to run for that seat but the entire voting population of Eureka gets to elect them. This way, the good of the entire city — like economic development, general planning, and budgetary matters — is taken into account. No on P.

Mike Newman, Eureka

No on 51, 55!

Editor:

Just about every time I open my voters information pamphlet the schools are asking for more money. This time it's propositions 51 and 55. Fifty-one is for construction and modernization of schools. I seem to recall we passed one for that purpose not too long ago. What do they want it for, chandeliers in the restrooms? As for 55, a "temporary" measure (we know how that goes) for a smorgasbord of needs, again which includes money for schools.

But no doubt they will pass because, as we know, it's ... "for the children." And if for some unexplained reason they both fail, don't worry: They'll be back next time.

Richard C. Brown, Eureka

No on Q! (Yes on R)

Editor:

Efficiency and effectiveness of operations are not enhanced by merging multifaceted departments into one and then adding a figurehead to oversee those operations.

Employees of the Auditor-Controller and Treasurer-Tax Collector departments provide critical checks and balances between the two departments to prevent fraud. If these departments are merged, then that fraud prevention firewall will be removed so new transaction auditing procedures will need to be developed.

The bottom line is this proposed merger would create another layer of management at the top of the food chain versus adding staff where the rubber meets the road. Is that efficient? I think not. And ... per the public record, no cost savings are projected to be achieved by combining these two departments. So why do it?

Therefore, as your sitting treasurer-tax collector, I recommend everyone vote NO on Q. (But yes on R so autonomy is maintained.)

John Bartholomew, Blue Lake

Amendment Needed

Editor:

It's old news that this presidential race is about preventing whichever front-runner from getting elected. However, voters lack direct power to do so: impeachment isn't preemptive and court trials are slow. Scandal will probably derail Trump and Clinton will mildly prevail. But what's next?

Our system no longer serves us. Votes are only "positive" (for someone) or "neutral" (abstaining), without provision for a "negative" vote against any candidate — an inherent imbalance. Abstaining or voting one's preference won't directly keep somebody else from taking office.

Therefore, notwithstanding my extensive lack of expertise, I propose a Constitutional Amendment: The Negative Ballot Act — Direct Voting Against Political Candidates, which would revise the rules to reflect deteriorating standards of contemporary discourse and conduct and establish the right to vote directly against an opposed contender for public office, similar to voting against propositions. So why not? It preserves the existing right to vote for a preferred candidate for that office.

Amen?

Scott Grusin, Eureka

Bye Bye, Bird Count

Thanksgiving tradition ending with longtime organizer John Hewston stepping down

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

Retired Humboldt State University professor John Hewston heard the birding call early in life.

Raised in rural corners of Washington state, a young Hewston was more likely to be looking for birds under bushes than tending a fishing line like his fellow elementary school students. He did the same walking home from school, writing down descriptions of what he saw.

By junior high, Hewston had started his first birding newsletter — something the now 93-year-old still does today.

“In those days that wasn’t anything anyone did but little old ladies in tennis shoes,” he says.

Back then, Hewston says, he was known as the “kooky Hewston kid” for his birding pursuits but his friends, classmates, teachers and family also embraced his passion for all things avian.

When he convinced the kids in his neighborhood to vote for a community bird while he was in high school, the winner was his personal favorite: the Western meadow lark.

It turned out to be a slightly rigged election.

“I found out later they kind of questioned each other, ‘What does Johnny like?’ and that was my influence. I didn’t mean it to be,” he says, smiling at the memory as he sat in the living room of his Arcata home amid bookshelves lined with bird books.

Decades later — after a career in natural resource management took him from a public relations role with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to the classroom dais at HSU — birding continues to play a central role in his life, having taken him to the far corners of the world in search of the next sighting.

He’s also spent the last 25 years coor-inating the Thanksgiving Bird Count for 12 western states, including Alaska, and compiling the results of observations from hundreds of participants.

Last year, he received some 345 responses with 131 species reported, which he compiled into a report sent out to contributing birders.

Now, Hewston says, it’s time for him to hang up his bird count binoculars — metaphorically at least — and with nobody stepping in to take over, this is slated to be the last round of the 50-year holiday tradition.

The count was started by professor Ernest Edward of Sweet Briar College in Virginia in 1966 — the same year Hewston arrived at HSU. He took over the tallying mantle in 1992.

One advantage of the Thanksgiving Bird Count is its simplicity: Participants choose a 15-foot diameter-circle — often a portion of their yard that’s visible from a window — and spend one hour counting the birds they see.

“It’s one count that you can do no matter what the weather is like, and it just takes an hour,” Hewston says.

Hewston watches his circle — a terraced portion of his backyard that’s dotted with bird feeders of all shapes and sizes — from his kitchen window.

Over the years, he estimates he’s seen at least 120 species on the wooded lot where his house sits perched on a hill.

Counts like this one have provided scientists with valuable data on bird populations over the years, according to Cindy Moyer, chair of the HSU Music Department and a member of the Redwood Region Audubon Society.

“They are a good way of collecting

John Hewston inspects a hummingbird feeder in his side yard as the tiny birds were busy feeding on a rainy afternoon. Photo by Mark Larson

data over a long period, so you can see changes over a long period of the time, the granddaddy of them all being the Audubon Christmas Bird Count," she says.

Part of a growing "citizen science" effort, the Audubon Society's Christmas Bird Count has been collecting sightings for more than a century.

One of the largest repositories of such crowd-sourced information can be found on the Cornell Lab of Ornithology website, which notes it receives "tens of thousands of bird observations" every day via its citizen science projects.

Those include eBird — which allows birders to track their own lists and share observations — and the Great Backyard Bird Count, both partnerships with the National Audubon Society.

"They trace bird migration and document long-term changes in bird numbers continentwide," the lab states on its website. "The results have been used to create management guidelines for birds, investigate the effects of acid rain and climate change, and advocate for the protection of declining species."

While time may have slowed Hewston's gait a bit, he still counts birds from his kitchen window every day, a routine that can be traced back to his childhood adventures crawling through the brush.

"I didn't take up drinking or smoking or anything like that," Hewston says. "I took up looking for birds."

He has lists of birds from his backyard, birds he's seen in the county and birds he observed at different buildings on the HSU campus.

More recently, he set up a trail camera in his backyard and was pleased to find it captured a shot of "Fred," the neighborhood bear.

Following his "retirement" from the Humboldt State faculty after 21 years, Hewston continued teaching his Bird Awareness class through the university's extension program and for a time with Elderhostel.

Another Elderhostel teacher and fellow birder Gary Bloomfield says Hewston had an intrinsic way of connecting with his students and sharing his passion for the natural world.

Hewston was able to transfer what Bloomfield termed his "ornithusim" during the classes — which he taught for four decades.

"He was welcoming. Encouraging at the beginning level as well as keeping the interest of more experienced birders," says Bloomfield, adding that he incorporated Hewston's teaching style into his own classes.

Bloomfield's wife, Jane Epperson, grew up with Jill Hewston, one of his three daughters. She recalls how Hewston would take them out birding at the Arcata Marsh back when the now restored area was referred to as "Mt. Trashmore." Epperson says she remembers sort of rolling her eyes at the offer, but went along with the trip. That's when Hewston showed her something that changed her mind: a blue heron viewed through a scope.

"I had never seen anything so beautiful so close up," she says. "It just amazed me and so it's no wonder I ended up marrying a birder."

While the Thanksgiving Bird Count may be drawing to a close, Hewston notes there are still plenty of ways for the growing world of bird lovers to be part of similar efforts.

"It's a cool thing to do now," he says, "which it didn't used to be."

Media Maven

Sign of Something

By Marcy Burstiner

There is something weird about this election: the almost total absence of campaign signs and bumper stickers, at least in Arcata, where I live. On my ballot are important races for the presidency, U.S. Senate, Congress, state assembly and city council. There are 17 state propositions that affect important issues such as school funding, the death penalty and marijuana.

But the only signs I've seen, and few at that, are for city council candidates. Now why is that? In past election years, a forest of signs covered lawns throughout town. And that seems to still be the case in some other parts of the county, state and country. A friend sent me a snap of her mom's neighborhood in Texas, where signs seem to fight for space on one lawn. I have a few theories why that's not so here.

Pay to say: At the North Country Fair, I asked the folks at the Hillary booth for a bumper sticker and they charged me for it. Early on in the campaigns, you expect candidates and their proxies to want — and need — to raise money. But in the last lap they should push the promos out and stick signs everywhere it is legal to put them. I offer valuable bumper space on car and I have to pay for that?

Or maybe people, like me, found that if you fess up to supporting one candidate, you find yourself hounded by emails asking for money from your candidate, the political party she's a part of and just about every darn candidate in a contested race across the state and country. This also is true for environmental and human rights organizations I support. Once you give anyone money, they won't leave you alone. It almost seems as if they function first to raise money and second to disseminate information. It gets so bad that you want to file a restraining order against them.

Fear of the pay back: Maybe it isn't the spam people fear, but the spit. There are still people I see out in the community who think I'm backing Jill Stein. I don't have the guts to tell them that Hillary had me back in 1992 when she said she don't bake no goddamn cookies. I don't like confrontation. There is so much animosity going around that I think people are afraid to put their political preference on their car or lawn. They might take the slap back comments on Facebook and Twitter, but it is harder to get egg off your wall or scratch marks off your car.

Internet shaming: It is one thing to get one neighbor annoyed; it's another to anger a thousand e-neighbors. The Internet connects us to the world but it can also make us victims of massive shaming campaigns. How easy is it for someone to snap a photo of your lawn and post it on Facebook to be reposted and reposted? Suddenly, your Twitter feed is flooded with posts so angry that you can't believe people can say such stuff in 140 characters. Who isn't afraid of that?

The forever effect: I think people finally realize that what goes on the web stays on the web. I just received an email from a news source from a long time ago. He was going through his garage and found an article I wrote about him back in 1994. He scanned it and sent it to me. Not much of my old stuff is up there and I didn't save a lot of it. Now, if the Times-Standard posts a photo of you or your kid at some community event, it is up there forever. Every comment someone makes to the press is a permanent quote that can be found by anyone, anywhere, forever.

Journalism hasn't really grappled with this always-and-everywhere effect on our willingness to talk.

Hack Attacks: If there is one issue that could stop a Hillary presidency, it is her emails. I've been thinking that Hillary Clinton has been subject to a dangerous double-standard. The Bush Administration destroyed some 22 million emails in violation of the Presidential Records Act of 1978, for instance, and few people even remember. Poke through anyone's emails and you are going to find stuff that sounds bad when broadcast to a wide audience.

This is the first election where we are seeing the power of Wikileaks and Wikileaks-like hacks. Maybe so many of us are keeping publicly silent because we fear becoming a target of tech trolls. The world used to be so quaint. We worried about burglars breaking into our homes and taking our TVs or computers. Now we worry about people breaking into our computers and taking stuff way more valuable.

Everyone has cameras in their hands at all times. And everyone can post anything anywhere. Post something on your lawn and the sign can be seen by someone across the town, or across the world. I heard an interview that National Public Radio did with information sociologist Zeynep Tufekci about Wikileaks and the dangers of a society that uploads first and thinks about ramifications second.

"We really need to figure out when to hold back," Tufekci said. "In the past, news was driven by scarcity. There wasn't enough news. And you sent around journalists. And you said, let's find out what's going on. Right now, there is too much information. In the 21st century, censorship doesn't work by withholding information. Censorship now works by flooding with information, by causing distraction, by causing confusion, by creating doubts and just this question mark and shadow so that you really can't figure out what's going on. And to me, this is almost like the opposite of whistleblowing. This is whistle-drowning in confusion and distraction."

Censorship also works when people fear speaking up because they don't want to be pointed at by a mob of crazy people. So in the craziest election this country has ever seen, and with more than a dozen races and propositions on the ballot, we end up with near silence on our lawns.

I find that scary. ●

Where's the Fire?

Possibly not here, post legalization

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt Bay Fire Chief Bill Gillespie gave a presentation on butane hash lab explosions on Oct. 18, urging the Eureka City Council to pass an ordinance that would cap sales and possession of the volatile fuel within city limits. (The council will vote on the ordinance next month.) Gillespie said local city and county lawmakers are watching Eureka closely, and may introduce their own ordinances in due time.

Gillespie's presentation included photos of makeshift labs encountered by his firefighters, with one depicting hundreds of 600 mL butane canisters piled in a room adjacent to open flames. In February, the department made a controversial policy change, deciding its firefighters would no longer enter active fires if there is a hash or honey oil lab inside. To illustrate the dangers faced by fire personnel, Gillespie showed the council a video of an explosion in a medical marijuana dispensary in Santa Fe. The footage, captured by the dispensary's security camera, shows flames erupting in an employee's face. The explosion caused the roof to collapse as he frantically tried to escape the room, his hair alight. The New Mexico laboratory was later found to be in violation of several codes related to employee health and safety, and its owners eventually paid $13,500 in fines to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

While the video underscores the danger and power of such explosions, it also inspires fresh questions related to the legalization of recreational cannabis, which California voters will decide next month. Locally, Gillespie and his colleagues have seen a host of unprofessional labs go up in flames, with Humboldt Bay Fire estimating at one point last year that hash lab explosions accounted for almost 20 percent of its structure fire calls. Will legalization — and a new regulatory framework for extract operations — stem the tide of explosive operations?

In a phone interview with the Journal, Gillespie said he and his colleagues can see several benefits to legalization. The permitting process may mean fewer fires due to electrical shorts, for one thing.

"Bringing things more mainstream, it means they will have to follow building and electrical codes," he said. "This is versus what I've seen in the past, where they just knock out a wall."

Does this put firefighters on the opposite side of law enforcement, which in California has largely come out against Prop. 64? Not necessarily. Legalization has had a diverse array of impacts on firefighters and first responders.

"In some statistics I've been seen, there have been changes or increases in traffic collisions," said Gillespie. "In Colorado, there was an increase in medical aid calls for people taking in too much concentrated cannabis, and they end up passed out, falling down, getting hurt."

Colorado has also seen an increase in explosions at extract labs, at least according to a report from the Rocky Mountain High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area program, which says that between 2013 and 2014, "when retail marijuana businesses began operating, there was a 167 percent increase in explosions involving THC extraction labs." The Journal was unable to confirm with the Rocky Mountain HIDTA how it gathered these statistics, or whether the numbers have changed in the last two years. The Northwest HIDTA office — which confirmed its branch had no central reporting system for these incidents, relying instead on self-reporting, newspaper articles and individual law enforcement agencies — has documented a different trend in Washington. There, the number of explosions took a sharp nosedive after July 1, the agency reports, when the state's recreational and medical cannabis systems were merged, apparently removing the gray-market profit driver for amateur scientists. This may end up being the case in California, as well.

"We're going to respond or treat whatever ends up being passed," said Gillespie. "We're going to continue to do our jobs."

Eureka's Temporary Camps Here to Stay

It has been six months since the city dissolved the long-standing homeless camp in the Palco Marsh. The fall's first storm has visited, bringing with it ripping winds and record rain. At least 30 people spent the storm newly housed, thanks to the efforts of Betty Chinn, the city of Eureka and the Humboldt County Department of Health and Human Services. But many more weathered it outdoors, on benches in Eureka's Old Town, hidden in the greenbelts or at a city-owned parking lot at the foot of Del Norte Street.

The parking lot is one of three spaces the city has been using as a rotating designated sleeping area, where the police will refrain from enforcing the city's no-camping ordinance and allow people to set up their tents between 7 p.m. and 7 a.m. The recent decision to move the Blue Angel Village — a shipping container shelter project for the homeless run by the Betty Kwan Chinn Foundation — to the city's parking lot at Washington and Koster streets spurred concerns from local business owners that there would be an even greater impact on their customers and employees.

Problems with theft, litter and troubling encounters have been blamed on the sleeping areas, which were implemented by the city after the Palco Marsh evictions, partially as a means to defend allegations contained in a lawsuit brought by local attorney Peter Martin and partially to address widespread concern that those living rough in Eureka would move into residential areas. Currently, the location of the temporary sleeping area rotates every two weeks.

With the move of the Blue Angel Village to the parking lot on Koster, only two sites remain for use as temporary sleeping areas — the parking lot at the foot of Del Norte and the Wharfinger building's overflow lot. Another site, at the foot of T Street near the Samoa Bridge, was proposed at the Oct. 18 city council meeting, but the council voted unanimously to let the motion die after residents and business owners of the northern "Bridge District" spoke extensively against the idea.

Although four councilmembers reached the same decision (with Councilmember Natalie Arroyo absent), their commentary on the issue revealed a wide spectrum of opinion.

Councilmember Linda Atkins called for a permanent camp, while Councilmember Melinda Ciarabellini pointed out that the city is spending a lot of money on stop-gap solutions, which runs counter to the city's pledged adherence to a Housing First philosophy.

There's no question the city has spent — and is spending — a hefty sum on the temporary sites, with $60,000 having already gone to pay hard costs, not to mention the personnel costs incurred by the city's police, public works and parks and recreation departments.

There is also no end date in sight for the temporary sleeping areas. Eureka City Manager Greg Sparks said in an email to the Journal that the city would like to phase out the parking lot sleeping areas, but "no better option has presented itself to date."

An American Genocide

Humboldt County's role in the mass slaughter
of California Indians
wasn't limited
to a massacre, vigilantes or even a militia.
It was systemic.

By Jerry Rohde

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

On the morning of April 7, 1862, Capt. David B. Akey and a detachment of soldiers from the Second California Cavalry left their camp in the Kneeland-Iaqua area. They were looking for Indians. The ground was covered with four inches of snow, which made tracking easy.

Akey described what happened next. "Found fresh trail of two Indians as reported by scouts," he wrote. "Followed the trail about one mile; came in sight of two Indians, supposed to be spies; ordered the men to fire; both were killed."

That same day, in San Francisco, Brig. Gen. George Wright issued a remarkable order to Akey's commander, Col. Francis J. Lippitt, who was in charge of the army's District of Humboldt. It stated in part: "The Indian difficulties in the Humboldt District have been growing worse and worse for years, and I am determined to settle them now for the last time. Every Indian that you may capture, and who has been engaged in hostilities present or past, shall be hung on the spot. Spare the women and children." (Emphasis added.)

The killing of two Indians based merely on a supposition of an army captain and an army general's order to execute Indian prisoners of war may seem shocking today, but in California in the mid-19th century such actions were typical. They were part of a statewide holocaust, whose victims were the Indian peoples who had lived here for centuries, and whose perpetrators were part of a white population that had been here but a few years. In those days, there was no word to fully describe these actions. But now, a century and a half later, we call it genocide.

This is exactly what UCLA history professor Benjamin Madley has done in his recently published book, An American Genocide: The United States and the California Indian Catastrophe, 1846-1873. Using army records, newspaper accounts and a variety of other sources, Madley meticulously pieced together a record of hundreds of incidents where whites massacred, murdered or otherwise harmed Indians. Sometimes the deeds were done by groups of vigilantes, but often the perpetrators were soldiers in the U.S. Army or members of the California state militia. By the early 1850s such attacks had become so widespread that Madley labels them a "killing machine."

Although some California Indians "did violently resist invasion, theft and exploitation," Madley notes that "this was no regular war." Rather, "whites routinely carried out acts defined as genocidal, most conspicuously by killing thousands of California Indians, often by surrounding and massacring whole villages."

For more than 150 years, one tragic event has dominated the history of Indian-white relations in Humboldt County—the killing of scores of Wiyot Indians in February of 1860 in what is called the Indian Island Massacre. It occurred less than a mile from Eureka, and it was reported in the state and national press. Even the most biased writers, such as Indian Wars of the Northwest author Anthony Jennings Bledsoe, admitted that the act was horrifying and castigated the whites who had conducted it. When the Samoa Bridge was completed across Humboldt Bay in 1971, it offered hundreds of motorists a daily bird's eye view of the massacre site. Indian Island became — and has remained — an emblem of the darkest time in the county's history.

But the emblem is misleading, for it reduced years of death and destruction to a single event. Focusing on this one massacre has allowed us to acknowledge and condemn the actions that a small group of people committed over a short space of time, but it obscures the many other similar incidents that occurred during a period measured not in hours but in decades. By thus diminishing the magnitude of what happened, the emblem of Indian Island has made the intolerable seem merely terrible.

For Madley, and for others like him who work in the field of genocide studies, this is not an acceptable outcome. Atrocities planned and committed by a group of people are seldom isolated events. They are usually part of a series of actions that have some larger destructive goal in mind. In this case, the goal was the extermination of the California Indians, and it was shared by many local citizens and by much of the military. Our knowledge of a single massacre needs to be vastly expanded in order to capture the enormity of the crime. Just as we distinguish between manslaughter and something worse — murder — here we need to distinguish between murder and something worse—genocide.

And this is what Madley, with remarkable thoroughness, has done. Starting with events in 1846 and continuing to 1873, he documents the continual killing of Indians throughout the state. More than that, he shows that these acts were not a series of isolated incidents but became part of a systematic effort to destroy the Indian people.

“Recording the numbers of California Indian people killed is not a mere academic exercise,” Madley writes in the book’s introduction. “As anyone who has lost a loved one knows, the death of a single person is a profound loss. Recording how many California Indians were killed between 1846 and 1873 is, in part, an attempt to understand the magnitude of the rupture and profound pain caused by their loss: each murder severed personal, familial, and tribal links. Each was a tragedy. When multiplied by thousands during a short period, the impact was nothing less than devastating. In the context of genocide, recording deaths also dignifies the slain and gives a voice to the departed.”

“Genocide” is one of the most potent words imaginable. It conjures up images of Nazi concentration camps, of the wholesale killing of entire groups of people based on some horrible mixture of revenge, prejudice and greed. The persons who combine to commit this act are condemned as truly evil. It is not a term to be used lightly and there is a set of standards that allow us to clearly determine if genocide has occurred. These are found in Article II of the United Nations Genocide Convention, a document approved by the United Nations General

“As anyone who has lost a loved one knows, the death of a single person is a profound loss. ... When multiplied by thousands during a short period, the impact was nothing less than devastating.”

— Benjamin Madley,
An American Genocide

This attack, on an unsuspecting Indian village in Round Valley, was similar to many of the massacres that occurred in Humboldt County.

Assembly in December of 1948.

The article lists five actions that constitute genocide when “committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group.” The actions include not only “killing members of the group,” but also “causing serious bodily or mental harm” and forcibly “transferring children of the group to another group.”

Throughout his book, Madley documents instances where such genocidal acts were committed. Many of these events occurred in Humboldt County and its neighbor to the north, Klamath County, a now-defunct entity that once extended from School Road in McKinleyville all the way north to the Oregon border.

One of the early events that Madley chronicles took place far from Humboldt Bay but soon affected this area.

In early 1850, numerous Indians were massacred in Sonoma and Napa counties by vigilantes that included the brothers Benjamin and Samuel Kelsey. A group of local ranchers intervened to stop the killing, and several of the raiders were arrested by the mayor of Benicia. Eight of the vigilantes were held for trial but were released on bail following the first decision ever made by the California Supreme Court. All eight quickly jumped bail and headed for places far away from the law. Several of the vigilantes, including the Kelseys, soon arrived at Humboldt Bay, where they helped found the town of Union, later to be called Arcata. (For details of this episode, see “The Sonoma Gang” in the Sept. 11, 2008 Journal.)

In January of 1855 came one of the first sustained attacks on local Indians. A dispute over an ox killed by some members of the Karuk tribe led to escalating violence on the part of local miners. Between Oct. 27 and Jan. 23, five volunteer militia companies were raised on the Klamath and Salmon rivers. One militia captain, Frank Buzelle, wrote from Orleans that “it was in contemplation to make a general attack on all the tribes” and that all were “marked down for slaughter.” Buzelle, an atypical militia officer, reported that he reached the mouth of the Salmon on Jan. 24 “just in time to save a general massacre” of the Karuks. But the conflict nonetheless escalated. The Indians fought to defend themselves and what was known as the Red Cap War ensued. Soon it was reported that some 70 to 80 Indians had been killed, compared to just eight white men. Finally in late March, intervention by U.S. Army Capt. Henry M. Judah brought the “war” to an end. Judah mustered out the militia units and persuaded the Indians to surrender. But the remaining Indians’ salvation came at a price—many of them were sent to the new Klamath Indian Reservation, losing their land and their freedom in the process.

During the next few years the sporadic killing of Indians in the Humboldt area continued. Madley quotes California historian Theodore H. Hittell, who in the late 19th century reported that “in 1856 there were a number of small expeditions by whites against [Nongatl, Sinkyone, Wiyot and other] Indians in the Eel river and Humboldt Bay regions, in each of which, though little or no provocation had been given, from six to 10 Indians were killed ... when volunteers went on the hunt they made it a point to avoid ridicule on their return and were sure to bring back scalps.”

Sometimes the attackers were groups of vigilantes that came together in response to a single incident, such as the killing of some cattle in September of 1856 by Indians near Hempfield’s Ranch in the mountains southeast of Blue Lake. In this case, several Indians at a nearby village were murdered in blind retaliation for the loss of the cattle. Other vigilante actions lasted longer, including a series of attacks in the upper Mattole Valley. There, in the summer of 1858, whites were found to be “waging a general war against the Indians [killing] some 15 or 20 ... .” A federal agent reported that “a war of extermination has been declared,” in the southern Humboldt area, where “some 20 or 30 men are said to have been busily occupied ... in killing.”

Col. Henry M. Black issued the order that “all Indian men taken in battle shall be hung at once.”

Similar to the vigilantes, but operating under the guise of government approval, were the state militia units. In October of 1858 some 80 volunteers enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. I. G. Messic. These troops ranged over much of eastern Humboldt County, in the Van Duzen and Mad river drainages and also along Redwood Creek. By the end of March of 1859 Messic’s men had reportedly killed between 75 and 100 Indians and taken about 350 prisoners. Not a single militiaman had died, largely because Messic’s men did not fight battles; instead they made surprise assaults on peaceful villages. The volunteers were mustered out of service in early April. Less than two weeks later, a grateful state Legislature “knowing that they were financially backed by Congress, voted to pay for this genocidal campaign after the fact,” as Madley puts it.

But such funding was not always forthcoming. In February of 1860 residents of the Hydesville area organized a group of vigilantes called the Humboldt Cavalry, which proceeded to ride up to the South Fork Eel and kill some 40 Indians. The group then applied for enlistment as state militiamen. When Gov. John Downey refused their request, members of the Humboldt Cavalry “resolved to kill every peaceable Indian man, woman and child in this part of the country.” The result was the Indian Island Massacre and several similar attacks. (For a full account of these massacres, see “Genocide and Extortion” in the Feb. 25, 2010 issue of the Journal.)

One of the persons reporting on the massacres was the commander at Fort

Humboldt, Maj. Gabriel I. Raines. Like Cap. Judah and certain other army officers who had preceded him, “emphasized protecting and negotiating with the Indians,” according to Madley. But Raines was soon reassigned to Washington Territory, and in early 1861 came orders that countermanded his pacification policy. The commander of the Pacific Department, brevet Brig. Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, issued instructions for what Madley calls “a new wave of genocidal killing led by the US Army.”

three separate army units moved into southern and eastern Humboldt County. One group attacked Indians along the Mad River and Redwood Creek. Another focused on Larabee Creek, in the central part of the county. The Indians there were taken by surprise; they were used to army units trying to capture them, but this time the soldiers came to kill. The third prong of the attack was on the South Fork Eel. Here the bewildered commander, Lt. James P. Martin, tried to make sense of his orders. He stated that "I do not know positively what depredations, if any, have been committed by the Indians killed by this command," and added, "my instructions are to consider all who run on approaching them as hostile and to fire upon them. In every case where any have been killed they ran at the first sight of the [army] men."

In three months' time, the soldiers killed more than 200 Indians. The United States Indian Affairs commissioner, William P. Dole, evaluated the attacks later that year. "This so-called 'Indian war' appears to be a war in which the whites alone are engaged," he reported scathingly. "The Indians are hunted like wild and dangerous beasts of prey; the parents are 'murdered,' and the children 'kidnapped.'"

Despite this condemnation by a federal official, Washington, according to Madley, continued its support of "genocidal actions by paying the killers' salaries after the fact."

So it was that by mid-1861, California Indians faced death from three forces—vigilantes, state militia units, and the regular soldiers of the U.S. Army. Bad as this was, it then became worse. Following the start of the Civil War in April 1861, the Secretary of War asked the governors of the various Union states to create volunteer units that would be brought into the army. In many states the volunteers became part of the forces that were fighting the Confederates. In California, however, the volunteer regiments and companies replaced regular army units that were sent east to fight. In all, almost 16,000 Californians joined up and many of them would participate in a new, more intense round of Indian killing.

At first, the volunteers were moderated by the benign policy of the new commander at Fort Humboldt, Col. Francis J. Lippitt, who issued one set of orders that instructed an officer “not to make war upon the Indians nor to punish them for any murders or depredations hitherto committed, but to bring them in and place them permanently on some reservation where they can be protected ... without bloodshed whenever it is possible.”

But, like Maj. Raines before him, Lippitt was soon overruled by a higher authority. In April came General Wright’s order to execute male Indian prisoners, which helped open the floodgates for further bloodshed. Within two days Lippitt had reversed himself and repeated Wright’s draconian command to his subordinate officers. At least 120 Indians had been killed by June in the subsequent campaign. In August, an attack by a party consisting of both volunteers and vigilantes killed between 24 and 40 Indians on Little River.

While murdering Indians, soldiers also continued to take prisoners. In September, some 833 Indians were removed from Humboldt County and sent by ship to Crescent City, where they were moved to the Smith River Reservation. Before they left, an unspecified number had died, “probably owing to close confinement.”

Once at Smith River or other Indian reservations, the inmates faced concentration-camp conditions. According to Madley, “confinement to a federal reservation was a death sentence for many of the state’s Indian people, whether they were starved to death, worked to death, shot, hanged, massacred, or died of sickness there.” Some Indians managed to escape from the reservations, but they often fared no better than those they left behind. A group of Lassik Indians broke loose and managed to make their way back to their homeland on the Eel River. However, they were captured by vigilantes near Fort Seward and there, according to the Lassik woman Lucy Young, some 40 Lassik males were lined up in a row and shot. The murderers then burnt the bodies.

During this time another genocidal crime occurred—that of “forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.” A number of women and children were captured in the Eel River region. The women were removed to Fort Seward, but “the children were all taken south and never heard of again.” It is likely that they were sold as slaves, a practice that individual whites had been engaging in for years. The difference now was that volunteers in the U.S.

Benjamin Madley

Benjamin Madley spent much of his childhood in Karuk Country on the Klamath River. As Madley puts it, “My father worked with Karuk Indian people there so, at an early age, I became aware of ongoing conflicts between Native Americans and newcomers.” In high school in Los Angeles, Madley found that the school’s mascot wore a Great Plains war bonnet, which he knew was not the traditional regalia of California Indian people. He also learned that one of his classrooms was built on the site of a Tongva Indian village. These experiences caused Madley to wonder, “Where are all of the Indian people?”

Madley received his B.A. from Yale University, focusing on genocide in Australia. His M.A. was completed at Oxford University and dealt with colonial violence in southwest Africa. He returned to Yale for his Ph.D. Deciding to focus on his home state, Madley wrote about the California Indian catastrophe. His dissertation was gradually transformed into An American Genocide. It took him “the better part of a decade” to complete the work.

Madley is currently an assistant professor of history at the University of California, Los Angeles. He teaches courses about Native America, the United States and genocide in world history.

endgame. He revived the order "that all Indian men taken in battle shall be hung at once" as his troops had killed "perhaps 100 people" or more by June. Black had also collected 500 prisoners at Fort Humboldt.

Then, mercifully, came a change in tactics. In July, California Indian Affairs Superintendent Austin Wiley, the former editor of the Humboldt Times, met with Indians from the Hoopa area, including 75 armed warriors who remained at large. In August, Wiley concluded a treaty with the Hupa Indians and their neighbors that ultimately established the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation. And finally, the army altered its genocidal policies. That November, Gen. Irwin McDowell issued a resounding order that "Hereafter no officer or soldier will execute

Army were complicit.

The murderous activity of the army and the vigilantes was not enough to satisfy many of the locals. In January 1863 a meeting in Eureka "recommended that 500 volunteers begin hunting Indians." That same month the Klamath County Grand Jury asked for the old standby, state militiamen. Soon the legislative delegation of Humboldt, Del Norte and Klamath counties visited General Wright and asked him to suggest to Gov. Leland Stanford that he call out the militia. Wright asked, but Stanford instead formed 10 new volunteer companies to join the U.S. Army. Six companies that were mustered between May of 1863 and March of 1864 became known as the Mountaineer Battalion. In June of 1863 the battalion's lieutenant colonel, local newspaper editor Stephen G. Whipple, took command of the Humboldt District from Col. Lippitt.

Whipple's troops continued the destruction of the Humboldt County Indians, but apparently at too slow a pace. In February of 1864, Wright replaced Whipple with Henry M. Black, who brought 250 soldiers with him. In addition, two new Mountaineer companies were soon mustered into service, making a total of 16 companies operating in the Humboldt Military District.

Black was clearly trying to play an or aid in executing any Indian prisoner on any pretext whatever."

With these events, the killing machine on the North Coast was finally dismantled. In the following years there were a few isolated incidents but nothing like the unrelenting attacks of the previous decade. The statewide toll, by the end, was enormous. In all, Madley estimates that a minimum of "some 9,000 to 16,000 California Indians, and probably many more" were killed by U. S. Army troops, California state militiamen and vigilantes. Although "in some instances, U. S. Army officers acted to protect California Indians from violence," Madley believes that army soldiers nonetheless killed at least 1,680 Indian people. He also notes that "neither the U.S. government nor the state of California has acknowledged that the California Indian catastrophe fits the two-part legal definition of genocide set forth by the 1948 UN Genocide Convention."

But, as Madley's evidence proves, what occurred in Humboldt County and elsewhere in the state was indeed "an American genocide." ●

The Neverland You Never Knew

Peter and the Starcatcher at HSU

By Pat Bitton

Did you know Neverland was a sailing ship before it was Peter Pan's forever home? Me neither. But that's just one of the fascinating details to emerge in Peter and the Starcatcher, Humboldt State University Theatre Department's season opener. It's a play with music (not a full-blown musical) that imagines a prequel to the Peter Pan story we all know and love, whether as a Disney movie, a stage musical or, in my case, an English pantomime. We also learn how Hook lost his hand, how the crocodile got his tick-tock, where Tinkerbell came from and, of course, how Peter became the boy who would never grow up.

Based on the first of a series of books by Ridley Pearson and Dave Barry, the play brings together the stories of Molly Aster (the versatile Camille Borrowdale, last seen as Mowgli in Jungalbook), apprentice starcatcher and privileged daughter of Lord Aster, and a nameless orphan boy (a delightfully androgynous Benny Allen, reflecting a lifetime of Peter Pans played by female actors, perhaps?) who hates grownups because "they always lie."

The production opens with the 13-member cast in primary roles (every actor plays at least two characters) setting the scene for an enchanting and fantastical two-hour adventure. The aforementioned Lord Aster (a suitably aristocratic Victor Parra) has been appointed by Queen Victoria as custodian of a chest full of starstuff, a powerful magical substance captured by starcatchers as it falls to earth; we are informed that Her Majesty has no need of it "because she's British." This precious cargo will be transported to the designated disposal site in the remote kingdom of Rundoon on the world's fastest ship, the H.M.S. Wasp, captained by well-known adventurer Robert Falcon Scott (Colin Gibbs).

For safety's sake (this is a dangerous mission!), Mollie and her nanny, the alliterative Mrs. Bumbrake (Ayanna Wilson, in a wonderfully over-the-top performance) follow the Wasp on the slower, older Neverland with a decoy chest full of sand.

The Neverland is, however, captained by the devious Bill Slank (an athletic and fast-talking Mickey Thompson), who has some very different ideas about the mission. Also on board are three boys, sold to Slank by lying schoolmaster Gremplin (a fittingly smart-mouthed Madison Burgett-Feagin, most recently in Dead Man's Cellphone) of St. Norbert's Orphanage for Lost Boys. Also on board are Mack, the world's most inept sailor (Lauren Zika), and kindly old seaman Alf (a genial and relatable, though somewhat wobbly-accented Matthew Hern, last seen as Baloo in Jungalbook). There is a brief struggle for leadership of the kid contingent between whiny-bully-coward Prentiss (an all-too-believable William English III) and Molly, rapidly and handily won by the determined Miss M.

But as the ships set sail, everyone's careful plans begin to unravel, starting with the takeover of the Wasp by notorious pirate Black Stache, played with fantastical flamboyance and marvelously mangled language by Maude Jaeb. Stache is ably supported in his evil endeavors by the exotically outfitted Smee (Ivan Gamboa, another Jungalbook alum with a gift for comic timing). Stache soon discovers that all is not as expected in the valuables department, setting the stage for shipwrecks, dramatic rescues, an exceptionally perceptive and talented ship's cat, and magical encounters in the Kingdom of the Mollusks.

Along the way, we meet Chief Fighting Prawn (Mickey Thompson in another strong performance), who speaks in a language largely composed of Italian restaurant menu items, a phalanx of high-kicking mermaids (yes, anything is possible if you believe!), and a super-mermaid/teacher (another diva-esque turn by Ayanna Wilson) who gives our hero some life lessons. We laugh as food-obsessed lost boy Teddy (Sarah Burfoot) tries to figure out how to eat a pineapple, and marvel as Molly and her father communicate in Dodo, Porpoise and Norse Code (resulting in some impressive Norwegian dialogue). And you probably don't want to know what happens when a crocodile gets a taste of starstuff.

Rick Elice's script is pure delight, overflowing with clever wordplay and sly references to the modern world. The set design is simple yet effective, giving context to the action without detracting from the performance, and the costumes are nothing short of stunning. Director Rae Robison and stage manager Roman Sanchez keep the action moving at a fast pace but the audience never feels left behind. Whether as sailors or mermaids, pirates or mollusks, the performers shift between characters seamlessly. The only real nit I have to pick is that the few ensemble musical numbers lack vocal clarity, and a few of the actors might have benefited from dialogue coaching.

Peter and the Starcatcher is an auspicious start to the new season; the students and faculty have set themselves a high bar with an imaginative and engaging production that reminds us of what's really important in life — and to never forget the magic. So clap your hands if you believe — I did, and I think you will, too.

Peter and the Starcatcher continues at HSU's Van Duzer Theatre Oct. 27, 28, and 29 at 7:30 p.m. and at 2:00 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 30. Call 826-3928 for tickets.

Ghost Town

The Haunted History tour bumps in the night

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

getout@northcoastjournal.com

Most of the sky has darkened but for an apricot streak of sunset over the mouth of Humboldt Bay. Alex Service stands with her back to the water at the foot of F Street, her brown, oilcloth duster flared out behind her as she sets the scene for a crowd of 30. She asks them to imagine what this cluster of streets and Victorian buildings looked like 150 years ago in a smaller, wilder Eureka with the redwood forest butting up against G and Fourth streets, the bustling harbor, the Native American village across the water and William Carson in his mansion up the road. She tells them of Hans Henry Buhne, the Danish sea captain who guided the first ship into the bay and the bride he lost to its waters years later, her voluminous dress and petticoats billowing in the water and dragging her twice from his grasp.

The big group for the Old Town Haunted History Ghost Tour turns toward the Hans Henry Buhne building as Eric Volmers picks up the tale. Standing 6 feet 6 inches in a dark wool coat and a Greek sailor's cap over a pate of white hair, his voice is soft and drifts in like a fog overhead. The building is the oldest in Eureka, he explains, housing a private museum upstairs and stories of Captain Buhne's presence. Neighboring shopkeepers and residents, he says, report cups sliding along tabletops on their own, the sound of footsteps after hours and the feeling of being watched.

Volmers and Service are not ghost hunters — there are no night vision goggles or odd instruments — and they welcome skeptics and believers alike. “We’re telling stories,” says Volmers, an Arcata High School history and government teacher by day. Some six years ago, his sister gave him the idea for the tour after taking one in San Francisco. He was toying with the idea when he stopped by for a drink at Oberon Grill, where he got to chatting with owner Roy Cole about the building's checkered past and accompanying ghost legends. After that, Volmers “went on a bit of a pub crawl,” asking questions and listening to tales from owners and regulars. Then he dove into research at local libraries, Humboldt State University and the county's public records offices, looking up census records, court documents and newspapers for stories of real people to see if they matched the whisperings. Before long he had more than enough material for a two-hour tour.

Service, curator of Fortuna's Depot Museum, joined him a year later, putting her historian chops to work recording local lore and researching its origins amid the speakeasies and scandals of Eureka's past. Her medievalist doctorate might seem an odd fit, but she studied at the University of York — York, mind you, bills itself as the title of most haunted place in England — where she continued to feed her childhood fascination with supernatural history. Service says she “would love to see a ghost,” but, alas, she’s “not sensitive to that.” She and Volmers do, however, know how to spin a yarn.

Across from the Waterfront Café, Service stops the crowd — a birthday party and a group of elementary school teachers among them — to recount the history of the Bluebird, one of old Eureka's 30 bygone brothels, which turned a brisk business upstairs. There are giggles over the tale of the headless man seen walking the train tracks at night, but a hush falls as Volmers shares the grim death of an unhappy Swedish boarder. “Imagine,” he says, “cutting your own throat.” Was this the unseen “angry man” that spoke to a cleaning lady's daughter years later? We cross the street quietly for a pastiche of rumors about the tunnels that supposedly run under the streets — used by bootleggers, publicity-shy Johns, Chinese on the run from an angry mob — before making our way to the Vance Hotel. A passerby listens for a moment and assures us that the Vance is indeed haunted by a woman who just this week has been breaking things.

And the Vance does not disappoint: We crane our necks upward, listening to our guides regale us about the building's former owner, who leapt to his death from one of its windows, salon employees seeing shadowy forms disappearing into walls and plumbers who've run screaming from voices in the basement. Imagining all this and crossing the brick-paved street to trace the rumored tunnel to the brothel at what is now the Oberon Grill, the Old Town where we work, run errands and fret over parking tickets is transformed. The ornate facades that inarguably have character start to feel like characters, witnesses and survivors of more feral generations, unlikely to be shocked at what we have to show them. We cut through the restaurant, the scene of Jack London's brawl, passing beneath both the chandelier people say has spun on its own and the second-floor, where a woman in period dress is said to appear and disappear.

We wind our way through alleys and tree-lined streets, Volmers and Service stopping for snippets of eerie tragedy, speakeasy shootouts, unhappy spirits of harassed women who drift former bank hallways and the handsy bosses who linger to grope the living. (Really, jackass? That's the unfinished business keeping you on this side of the veil?) In the Eagle House we hear of strange goings on in rooms 24 and 25, and workers reporting floating balls of light — we also lose one couple to the bar at Gallagher's. The rest of us pause along First Street to consider Eureka's very real horrors, the massacre of Wiyot people at Indian Island that earned Eureka the title of “Murderville, California” in the national press — a nod to the dark side of the town's wild days.

The tour ends at the gazebo with a final image of bygone Eureka, the real ghost on this tour: the carriages and sailors, the drunks stumbling into the street to be swept up either by the Salvation Army Band or the ladies of the Alpine Hotel. After a little applause, a handful of people head back to Oberon Grill, some to see if they can get upstairs, the guides for a drink at the bar. If you've got a little more time, join them for that drink and ask about the Carson Mansion and the Carson Block Building — they have plenty more stories to tell.

You need to reserve a spot ($20) on an Old Town Haunted History Ghost Tour by calling 672-5012. Tours run with a minimum of five people, so you can either jump in with a group or pony up $100 for a private walk. The tour meets up at Old Town Coffee and Chocolates at 7 p.m., and a hot chocolate on a cold night isn't a bad idea — might even help with those chills. ●

For the Love of Figs

By Heather Jo Flores

downanddirty@northcoastjournal.com

I can't stop eating them. There's a fig tree at the place where I am staying and I can't seem to keep them out of my mouth! It's a huge tree, maybe 50 years old, sprawling across the low wood fence and dropping down into the neighbors' yard. They don't mind. Every October, both houses get more figs than they know what to do with, just from the one tree. It's a Black Spanish, and it's famous among fig aficionados as being one of most prolific, cold-hardy and easy to grow varieties.

If you don't have figs in your garden, you should plant one immediately! Plant 10! Figs are not only beautiful, delicious, nutritious and easy to grow, they also provide shade and privacy, create habitat for birds and insects, and are star players in food forests from Vermont to Arcata to Spain and back again.

The sprawling nature of a fig leaves space between for annuals and perennials. Try currants, comfrey, seaberry, canna and blueberries, for starters. In last month's article about food forests, I detailed a fig guild. Check it out.

Fig trees can definitely take up a good amount of space, so give it to them. If you live in town or space is limited, plant the figs on an edge, against a back fence or on the parking strip. In the country, plant a patch to create a circular grove or establish a border. I have never had problems with deer eating figs, though your results may vary.

But not all figs are created equal. Many types of figs will literally drown in a wet winter and/or die back all the way to the ground every time it freezes. In our temperate climate, it is important to choose varieties that do well here. Here are my four favorites. Each of these bears fruit at different times, so plant one of each and you'll have an extended bounty. These are available online and at most of the local nurseries.

Black Spanish, as mentioned above, is always a winner. It loves hot summers and wet winters, and can be quite prolific, even in a marginal site. The fruits are medium-sized, dark, firm and juicy, and delicious fresh or dried. Naturally smaller than other varieties, in the right spot it can produce two crops a year.

Desert king is one of the best varieties for maritime gardens because it resists late spring frosts and ripens in mid-summer, even in cooler microclimates. Trees can get quite large.

Lattarulla, aka Italian honey fig, is more of a golden color, excellent for drying and can bear two crops in one season, one ripening in late July and the second in mid-September.

Vern's brown turkey fig, not to be confused with plain brown turkey, was developed by Oregon gardener Vern Nelson and is widely known as reliable, productive and prolific in temperate gardens from British Columbia to the Bay Area. It bears large, sweet brown figs and will often produce two crops a year.

Neverella, also called Osborne prolific, makes stunning, opalescent fruits. Naturally a smaller tree that is more shade-tolerant than other varieties, this is an excellent choice for urban gardens.

Petite negra grows only 3 to 4 feet tall — perfect for your container garden! Medium-sized fruits are reddish black and come twice a year.

You could also just take some cuttings from an existing tree in your neighborhood. Figs are super easy to propagate. If you know of one that does well where you live, just wait until it's done fruiting and then ask to take a few cuttings, either from the tips of the young branches or from the suckers around the base of the tree. If you get lucky, some of those suckers will already have roots growing! Get the cuttings established in pots and plant out in early spring while they are still dormant, or if you can keep the soil evenly moist for a month or two, then you can just stick the cuttings directly in the ground.

Once established, figs can be extremely drought tolerant, but, as with most trees, they need to be watered regularly for the first three years. Use this young-tree time to establish companion perennials before the shade canopy of the fig begins to spread. They respond well to an annual top-dressing of rich compost, but aren't especially needy when it comes to maintenance, fertilizers or pruning. In my experience, figs don't take kindly to being pruned, and whole sections can rot if a cut is made improperly. Prune if you must, but be sure to do it only when the tree is completely dormant: after Thanksgiving and before Groundhog Day.

Fun fact: Figs are an inside-out flower, and some varieties are pollinated by the aptly named fig wasp. Other types of wasps don't pollinate but simply use the figs as a nursery for their larvae. These wasps are also known to hunt insects that are harmful to plants, so having figs benefits your whole garden. "I wish I wouldn't have planted that fig tree" said no one, ever. ●

Long Halloween

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Halloween

Although Halloween falls on a Monday this year — much to the children's dismay — it seems everyone will go ahead and consider Friday, Saturday and maybe Sunday Halloween or at least a pre-party. I expect the children will still be honoring this high-fructose holiday on Monday but adults who like costumes have many shows to pick from this weekend. These might be the only few days you'll see "Make America Great Again" hats in Arcata — and maybe some jailbird Hillary costumes in Fortuna — so enjoy that.

Thursday

Alaskan singer-songwriter Marian Call will be in Eureka tonight at Northcoast Audio (Fifth and C streets) to peddle her unique "funky acoustic joy jazz" with a bit of comedic insight to boot. I am told she writes songs about spaceships, avocados, Windows Vista and life in Alaska. She'll start up around 7 p.m. for donations. Many of us here on the North Coast are familiar with the name Kimock via the guitar whiz and Dead-worthy Steve Kimock who comes through our neck of the woods every so often. Tonight, a project with his son John at the center, aptly titled Kimock will be at the Arcata Theatre Lounge around 8 p.m. John Kimock began playing and composing music young, no surprise in a family like this. Bouncing between Vermont and Sonoma, John's been working on new music — on his own and with his father — for this "sympiotic" project. $24 lets you check out this full band and hear what a talented father and son can come up with. Sam Kaplan-Good, a percussionist of many talents and as many bands, politely informs me of a new band he's been working with and its debut at The Jam tonight. Rogue's Gallery is a "five-piece all-original Americana/alt-country group, with pedal steel and three-part harmonies," as Sam explains it. The pedal steel and harmonies caught my attention, let them catch yours. The new band has already recorded a song called "Rather Not Know" with Ryan Roberts as the engineer. Speaking of Ryan, his band Absynth Quartet follows up Rogue's Gallery on The Jam stage. No word on price but the show is at 9:30 p.m.

Friday

I love hearing about local band album release shows because that means, well, somebody recorded an album. It's rapidly becoming a lost art but, to me, when a band still takes the time to write enough material for even an EP and cobbles together the money to record it well, to bring its physical existence into the world, it shows the band takes the music seriously. That said, local "twang noir" troubadours of Moon Pine are celebrating the release of End County Road, a fitting title for many areas around here. If you haven't seen or heard Moon Pine yet, I recommend it. Comprised of Nola "Victrola" Pierce with local heavy-hitters Michael Dieter, Jonathan Kipp, Issa Stemler and Brian Hennesey, it's a talented group that knows how to weave sonic fabric that's soft and gentle, as well as rougher, coarser stuff that keeps out cold and dust. Local alt-something trio (of which I'm one) Strix Vega opens the show at 8 p.m. at The Sanctuary in Arcata for $5. New Riders of the Purple Sage was to appear in Arcata this evening, but I hear David Nelson has recently broken his arm. While he heals up, some of his friends will be jamming in his place at Humboldt Brews tonight at 9:30 p.m.

Edge of the West and Bear Tread will play tunes that fit the vibe. Bring $15 to get in. If something a little more in the black metal vein is what you want, the only scratch to your itch tonight that I know of is at the Li'l Red Lion in Eureka. Out of Colorado Springs, black metal duo The Houseman Brothers are supporting their new album The Carnal Sabbath with their project Helleborus. I'm not clear on what the project is — perhaps the name of their tour show? — but you can find out at 9 p.m. for $5. (On a side note, hey bands and promoters: I appreciate you letting me know about your shows so I can then let people know about them. While you're at it, let me know the times and cover charges for your shows. Thanks.) I'm still puzzled by the adult Halloween thing, but then again, much in this life puzzles me. Tonight's the 2016 KMUD/Mateel Halloween Boogie at The Mateel in Redway. The organizers let me know that not only do the SoHum festivities begin at 8 p.m., but that for only $25 you can hear from a "giant funk and rock collective from L.A." called Trulio Disgracias under the direction of Norwood Fisher of Fishbone. Opening the show is King Yellowman & the Sagittarius Band, who I'm told delighted fans at the recent Reggae on the River. You rockers may know the name of cult legend Hawkwind from the U.K. Call it space rock, psychedelic rock, proto-punk — whatever you call it, an iteration of the band will be in Arcata tonight. With Lemmy and Ginger Baker as two of the more well-known graduates of Hawkwind, fans will also recognize the names of Dave Brock and Nik Turner. Turner is the brass/woodwind player of the band and one who you may recall wore the fabulous space-aged/Egyptian-aged outfits back in the heyday. So, without further ado, Nik Turner's Hawkwind will be bringing its Space Rock Odyssey Tour to The Miniplex tonight around 9 p.m. joined by Hedersleben from San Fran and locals Los Bears covering all of Weezer's Blue Album. The $10 will be worth it.

Saturday

I declare tonight "Pretend Halloween," so expect to see a lot of costumes out on the town. There may be a glut of Rasta costumes tonight at the Arcata Theatre Lounge around 8 p.m. as reggae legend Don Carlos and Dub Vision Band will be headlining tonight joined by Messenjah Selah with the Fyah Squad Band and DJ Unite all for a $30 ticket price. Perhaps you'll find some oversized suits tonight at the Blue Lake Casino and Hotel as local Talking Heads tribute Naive Melodies will be doing their thing tonight for free at 9 p.m. I'm unclear how to generalize the costumes — or lack thereof — you might find at The Alibi tonight, but no matter. It's another Songwriter Circle of Death (The Rebirth of Death) starting around 11 p.m. featuring locals The Bored Again, Billy Cook and Nola Victrola (of above-mentioned Moon Pine). It's a free show, so hear these songwriters share their songs.

Monday

It's actually Halloween, so you parents probably will have a hard time getting out to a show tonight as you'll be hoofing it around your neighborhood with the kids and then giving them insulin injections before bedtime. So for the non-breeders — or those who have kids who actually moved out — have fun out there tonight. As you know, in Humboldt County you're never very far from the sounds of The Dead. Be they performed by members of the extended family, songs from the band riding the local airwaves, or local tributes, The Dead live on. Tribute band Rosewater will be at The Jam for two nights getting you your fix. 9:30 p.m. show, price TBA.

Tuesday

Missed Rosewater last night? Check it out tonight at the Jam, more info above.

Wednesday

All the way out from Minneapolis, you can hear the "cutting edge front porch Americana soundscapes" of The Last Revel. A trio of multi-instrumentalists, these folks play a blend of rock, folk, old time string band and such with an array of guitars, bass, fiddle, banjo, harmonica and three-part vocal harmonies. I don't know if their latest album is ready for sale yet but you'll hear some songs off it for sure. It's $10 for this 9:30 p.m. show. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. He wears a costume every day.

ELEMENTS OF A TRADITIONAL OFRENDA

PRESENTED BY

1. PAPEL PICADO

Is the Spanish phrase for "perforated paper", referring to the detailed designs that are traditionally hand-cut onto brightly-colored tissue paper.

2. PICTURE

A framed photo of the dead person to whom the altar is dedicated, usually positioned in a prime spot on the altar.

3. CEMPASÚCHITL (MARIGOLDS)

These yellow-orange flowers, also called cempasúchitl, symbolize death. Their strong fragrance also help lead the dead back to their altars.

4. SUGAR SKULLS

When Sugar Skulls are offered to the dead, they are placed lovingly on an altar for the deceased along with other ofrenda, such as the person's favorite foods and drinks when they were alive.

5. TEQUILA

The favorite drink of the deceased is also laid out on the altar, whether it is tequila, whisky, soda, or anything else!

6. PAN DE MUERTO

Bread of the dead is enjoyed at parties, festivals, & graveyards, when the living gather to remember and toast the dead.

7. FOOD

Traditional Day of the Dead foods that you would find on altars include atole, mole, tamales, and tortillas. Altars also usually include the dead person's favorite foods, including modern foods like Rice Krispies or potato chips!

8. CANDLES

Candles are lit to welcome the spirits back to their altars.

Harry Potter

Gather with friends to celebrate all things bountiful at Studio 299's Harvest Festival and Open House Saturday, Oct. 29, from 1 to 5 p.m. (free). The all-ages event features the opening of the gallery's new art exhibition, an open house for the new Community Kitchen, fresh apple cider pressing and food, beer and wine available for purchase.

Why is a pig eating a pumpkin so darn cute? We don't know, but here's your chance to see it in action. Enjoy an afternoon watching animals nibble and nuzzle their Halloween treats during Boo at the Zoo at Sequoia Park Zoo on Saturday, Oct. 29, from noon to 4 p.m. ($7, $6 seniors/military, $5 kids 3-12). Kids can also have at the crafts and games, apple cider, snacks, a costume parade and contest.

Swear you're stronger stuff than Slytherin? Know you're destined for Gryffindor greatness? Come to the Harry Potter Celebration at the Humboldt County Library on Saturday, Oct. 29 from noon to 3 p.m. to get sorted into a Hogwarts house, make your own wand and receive a dragon's egg from Hagrid (free). With tons of Potterverse fun to be had, kids of all ages can expect a grand time.

Fun-Size

It's here! The most magical time of the year for little ghouls and goblins. With free trick-or-treating, costume contests, parades and old-fashioned carnival fun, there's plenty to do this Halloween. We've got the scoop on the (not so) scary spots for your little monsters.

McKinleyville's Halloween Costume Parade is Saturday, Oct. 29 at 11 a.m. at McKinleyville Safeway Shopping Plaza (free). Get your Draculas in a row at the small kiosk in the parking lot before 11 a.m. to join. Old Town's Trick or Treat fun also happens Saturday, Oct. 29 from 2 to 4 p.m. (free) and is open to costumed children 12 and under who are accompanied by an adult.

Halloween day trick-or-treating happens in Arcata, Fortuna and Garberville. Arcata's Trick or Treat on the Plaza is Monday, Oct. 31 from 4 to 6 p.m. (free). Fortuna's Trick or Treat takes place from 3 to 5 p.m. on Main Street (free) — also for costumed children 12 and under who are accompanied by an adult. And Southern Humboldt is having a Halloween Fest on Monday, Oct. 31 at the Garberville Town Square with a costume and scream contest starting at 3:30 p.m. with small-town trick-or-treat to follow (free).

Halloween evening, corral the kids in a safe place for candy and games at the Kids Karnival 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. at Redwood Acres Fairgrounds (free) or the Halloween Carnival at Dow's Prairie Grange Hall from 7 to 9 p.m. (please bring canned food or non-perishables).

And boasting plenty of tricks, RampArt Skatepark is having its Halloween Fundraiser on Saturday, Oct. 29 at 8 p.m. ($5) featuring two bands, a costume contest and a skate contest.

King-Size

If you're skipping the family-friendly portion of Halloween this year and are looking instead for grown-up thrills and chills, here's a sampling of events sure to scare the wits out of you.

The granddaddy of local scream-throughs, the Haunted Kinetic Lab of Horrors is back Oct. 28 through 31, from 7 p.m. to midnight at the Kinetic Sculpture Lab ($12). This shriek-fest is recommended for ages 13 and over and features live music outside — to drown out the screams.

Head down to the foggy docks at Waterfront and Commercial street for The Haunted 1091 Ghost Ship on Friday, Oct. 28 and Saturday, Oct. 29 from 6 to 10 p.m. ($10). Wear flat shoes for this one. You'll be creeping through three levels of steely terror (and you may need to run). Ages 12 and up only.

Ghouls, zombies and other crazies run amok at The Haunted Mill Tour at Blue Ox Millworks from 7:30 p.m. to midnight Friday, Saturday and Monday, ($12). No children under 13 admitted. Bring an extra pair of big boy/girl pants for this one.

Tucked away in the rural reaches of Willow Creek is Dream Quest's Haunted House, happening Oct. 29-31 from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. on Mayfair Drive, one block off of State Route 299 ($5). Apparently a film company of dubious reputation has set up a studio in Willow Creek ... Not recommended for children.

And for an evening of macabre entertainment, don't miss Rotary Club of Southwest Eureka's spookfest, Cirque de Souless: The Illusion, Saturday, Oct. 29 from 7 to 11 p.m. at the Sequoia Conference Center ($65, $60 advance). This one has it all: music, dancing, appetizers and ... terror!

Reviews

AMERICAN HONEY. In this case it's difficult to separate my staid and cynical self from the open, curious one. The former looks at this movie as a bigger, louder take on the same themes as Kids (1995): a decades-older artist's peek through the keyhole of disenfranchised youth culture, designed to freak out the squares. But the latter sees the almost-accidental beauty in American Honey, can appreciate the freshness of its perspective and its aggressive vitality. It is a formidable, challenging artwork that frustrates and satisfies in almost equal measure; it appears to accomplish exactly what it sets out to, which may or may not mean it is an artistic success.

In the squalid swelter of Oklahoma, 18-year-old Star (Sasha Lane) Dumpster-dives and looks after the young children of some shiftless dude with whom she is entangled. But then she encounters Jake (Shia LaBeouf) in a K-Mart parking lot, along with his raggedy crew of young men and women, and her curiosity is piqued.

She accepts Jake's invitation to accompany them to Kansas City, first spiriting the children to their recalcitrant mother in a noisy roadhouse and fleeing the scene. By morning, Star is part of the crew: an itinerant mob of young people bouncing around the mid-West in a van, selling magazines door to door. Ultimately, they all, even Jake, work for Krystal (Riley Keough), a sloe-eyed sadist who holds them in her sway. Jake takes Star under his wing, introducing her to his sales method: a combination of shabby charm, outright mendacity and petty theft. She, smitten but disapproving of the dishonesty, headstrong, frustrating — 18 — sticks around to be near him, befriending but keeping the rest at arm's length. And so things continue: long days in the van getting high and drunk, nights in roadside residence motels, weak sales pitches to reluctant suburbanites. Star punctuates the routine with some forays of questionable wisdom, and her relationship with Jake stays at a fairly consistent level of crazy.

There is a plot, or at least the skeleton of one, behind American Honey, but writer-director Andrea Arnold focuses more on atmosphere. To her credit, she creates and sustains a palpable one. The life these people are living is vibrant and authentic, full-blooded and terrible. But she insists that we join in on that life for almost three hours, and at some point that becomes a strain. While the pace and feeling of the movie can be gentle, almost lyrical, with long cutaways and asides designed to add to the feeling of American summer, they can also be the source of mounting frustration. Arnold insists on extensive use of a hand-held camera, which increases the intimacy and immediacy of the movie, but also creates a faux-documentary aesthetic that eventually undermines the integrity of the story. The frequent gorgeous shots are imbued with a just-happened-to-be-there quality that diminishes their impact. Showing us a beautiful thing, unadorned, without composition is fine but it is a snapshot, not cinema.

I find myself more troubled, though, by the feeling that Arnold — who is British — examines this uniquely American subculture from some elevation, like some pith-helmeted explorer pushing in to the Dark Continent. As well as the created atmosphere of the movie works, there are hard to define moments within it that suggest a morbid editorial curiosity; a critical distance disguised as intimacy. And it's hard not to feel manipulated when the languid, inebriated tone of the piece is ruptured (not infrequently) by dread and menace. American Honey is an impressive, immersive movie. It is beautifully acted, challenging and beautiful. But there is something disingenuous, a posturing inherent in the discrepancy between its tone and its execution that I find off-putting. R. 163M. BROADWAY.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES.

Zach Galifianakis (once a brilliant comedian, now perhaps our most unlikely movie star) and Isla Fisher star as Jeff and Karen Gaffney, suburban parents caught up in the pleasant doldrums of regular life. Jeff works in human resources at a major tech company. Karen is an interior designer. Everything is ... fine. After they send the kids away to camp, impossibly accomplished, sexy new neighbors move on to the cul de sac. Tim and Natalie Jones (Jon Hamm and Gal Gadot, so, yeah), a travel writer and food blogger cum philanthropist, respectively, seem perfect but Karen has questions.

Of course they aren't quite what they seem; we wouldn't have much of a movie otherwise. Tim and Natalie draw the Gaffneys into the world of international espionage. There are some solid pratfalls along the way and the two couples work well as foils. Ultimately, though, the movie falls a little flat. It is reminiscent of the some of the great comedy hybrids of the 1980s, but is too polished, too stylistically nondescript to be more than a slightly sad reminder. PG13. 101M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

DEEPWATER HORIZON. Peter Berg's taut oil rig disaster drama keeps a tight focus on the struggle of its real-life characters in a few crucial hours. PG13. 107M. BROADWAY.

DENIAL. Rachel Weisz plays historian Deborah Lipstadt in her legal battle against Holocaust denier David Irving, who sued her for libel in 1996, forcing her to prove the WWII atrocities actually occurred. PG13. 103M. MINOR.

DON'T BREATHE. Director Fede Alvarez's atmospheric heist-gone-wrong horror movie about teens trapped in a murderous blind man's home boasts a solid story and earned scares. R. 88M. MINOR.

THE GIRL ON THE TRAIN. The thriller relies on the twist and leaves plot fragments hanging, but its departure from standard detective narrative is refreshing and Emily Blunt's performance carries the suspense. R. 112M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

HELL OR HIGH WATER. A pair of bank-robbing brothers (Chris Pine, Ben Foster) are pursued by a pair of Texas Rangers (Jeff Bridges, Gil Birmingham) in a fine, character-driven film about what poverty does to people. R. 102M. MINOR.

KEVIN HART: WHAT NOW? The comedian performs stand-up in a Philadelphia arena. R. 96M. BROADWAY.

THE MAGNIFICENT SEVEN. Fine performances in this enjoyable remake with strong action sequences, but it lags in places and breaks no new ground for the genre. PG13. 133M. BROADWAY.

MAX STEEL. Mattel toy-based disaster of a movie about a teen who discovers he has super powers and a robo-buddy. Ben Winchell, Maria Bello and Andy Garcia star. PG13. 92M. BROADWAY.

MIDDLE SCHOOL: THE WORST YEARS OF MY LIFE. The new kid in school (Griffin Gluck) sets out to break each of its suffocating rules of conduct. R. 112M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

MISS PEREGRINE'S HOME FOR PECULIAR CHILDREN. Eva Green stars as headmistress in Tim Burton's adaptation of the book about children with magical powers. PG13. 127M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

OUIJA: ORIGIN OF EVIL. Do you want evil spirits? Because this is how we get evil spirits. A phony séance gone wrong leads to a possessed teen. PG13. 99M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

STORKS. A retail delivery bird winds up in the baby business trying to get an infant to a family. Or you could just have the talk with your kids. Voices of Jennifer Anniston and Kelsey Grammer. PG. 87M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

Legal Notices

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF DONNA LEE HOLLAND CASE NO. PR160291

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, DONNA LEE HOLLAND A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, IAIN HAUUKA In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that IAIN HAUUKA be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on November 17, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

On 11/8/2016 at 11:00 AM, CLEAR RECON CORP., as duly appointed trustee under and pursuant to Deed of Trust recorded 10/13/2006, as Instrument No. 2006-29668-21, of Official Records in the office of the County Recorder of Humboldt County, State of CALIFORNIA executed by: DAVID M BUDDE, UNMARRIED MAN WILL SELL AT PUBLIC AUCTION TO HIGHEST BIDDER FOR CASH, CASHIERS CHECK DRAWN ON A STATE OR NATIONAL BANK, A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL CREDIT UNION, OR A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, OR SAVINGS BANK SPECIFIED IN SECTION 5102 OF THE FINANCIAL CODE AND AUTHORIZED TO DO BUSINESS IN THIS STATE: AT THE FRONT ENTRANCE TO THE COUNTY COURTHOUSE, 825 5TH ST., EUREKA, CA 95501 all right, title and interest conveyed to and now held by it under said Deed of Trust in the property situated in said County and State described as: LOT 20 OF TRACT NO. 484, CAMINO WAY SUBDIVISION, ACCORDING TO THE MAP THEREOF FILED DECEMBER 18, 1997, IN BOOK 22 OF MAPS, PAGES 22 AND 23, HUMBOLDT COUNTY RECORDS. The street address and other common designation, if any, of the real property described above is purported to be: 1465 CAMINO WAY MCKINLEYVILLE, CA 95519 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address and other common designation, if any, shown herein. Said sale will be held, but without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title, possession, condition, or encumbrances, including fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust, to pay the remaining principal sums of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust. The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is: $296,343.70 If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. The beneficiary under said Deed of Trust heretofore executed and delivered to the undersigned a written Declaration of Default and Demand for Sale, and a written Notice of Default and Election to Sell. The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (844) 477-7869 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.STOXPOSTING.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 042743-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. FOR SALES INFORMATION: (844) 477-7869 CLEAR RECON CORP. 4375 Jutland Drive Suite 200 San Diego, California 92117

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL

BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call the trustee's information line at 530-246-2727 or visit this Internet Web site: calforeclosures.biz, using the file number assigned to this case: TS #16-2289. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. SUMMONS (Family Law)
CASE NUMBER: FL160380

NOTICE TO RESPONDENT: James F Jennings You have been sued. Read the information below. PETITIONER'S NAME IS: Caroline E. Jennings You have 30 calendar days after this Summons and Petition are served on you to file a Response (form FL-120 or FL-123) at the court and have a copy served on the petitioner. A letter, phone call or court appearance will not protect you. If you do not file your Response on time, the court may make orders affecting your marriage or domestic partnership, your property, and custody of your children. You may be ordered to pay support and attorney fees and costs. For legal advice, contact a lawyer immediately. Get help finding a lawyer at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courts.ca.gov/selfhelp), at the California Legal Services website or by contacting your local county bar association. NOTICE-RESTRAINING ORDERS BELOW: These restraining orders are effective against both spouses or domestic partners until the petition is dismissed, a judgment is entered, or the court makes further orders. They are enforceable anywhere in California by any law enforcement officer who has received or seen a copy of them. FEE WAIVER: If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the clerk for a fee waiver form. The court may order you to pay back all or part of the fees and costs that the court waived for you or the other party.

1. The name and address of the court are:
Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt
825 5th Street
Eureka, CA 95501

2. The name, address, and telephone number of the petitioner's attorney, or the petitioner without an attorney, are:
Caroline E. Jennings
300 H. St
Arcata, CA 95521
Date: May 24, 2016 clerk, by Kim M. Bartleson/Jackson W., Deputy STANDARD FAMILY LAW RESTRAINING ORDERS

Starting immediately, you and your spouse or domestic partner are restrained from:

1. Removing the minor children of the parties from the state or applying for a new or replacement passport for those minor children without the prior written consent of the other party or an order of the court;

2. Cashing, borrowing against, canceling, transferring, disposing of, or changing the beneficiaries of any insurance or other coverage, including life, health, automobile, and disability, held for the benefit of the parties and their minor children;

3. transferring, encumbering, hypothecating, concealing, or in any way disposing of any way disposing of any property, real or personal,

whether community, quasi-community, or separate, without the written consent of the other party or an order of the court, except in the usual course of business or for the necessities of life; and

4. Creating a nonprobate transfer or modifying a nonprobate transfer in a manner that affects the disposition of property subject to the transfer, without the written consent of the other party or an order of the court. Before revocation of a nonprobate transfer can take effect or a right of survivorship to property can be eliminated, notice of the change must be filed and served on the other party. You must notify each other of any proposed extraordinary expenditures at least five business days prior to incurring these extraordinary expenditures and account to the court for all extraordinary expenditures made after these restraining orders are effective. However, you may use community property, quasi-community property, or your own separate property to pay an attorney to help you or to pay court costs.

NOTICE-ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE HEALTH INSURANCE: Do you or someone in your household need affordable health insurance? If so, you should apply for Covered California. Covered California can help reduce the cost you pay towards high quality affordable health care. For more information, visit www.coveredca.com. Or call Covered California at 1-800-300-

WARNING-IMPORTANT INFORMATION California law provides that, for purposes of division of property upon dissolution of a marriage or domestic partnership or upon legal separation, property acquired by the parties during marriage or domestic partnership or upon legal separation, property acquired by the parties during marriage or domestic partnership in joint form is presumed to be community property. If either party to this action should die before the jointly held community property is divided, the language in the deed that characterizes how title is held (i.e., joint tenancy, tenants in common, or community property) will be controlling, and not the community property presumption. You should consult your attorney if you want the community property presumption to be written into the recorded title to the property.

Halloween, Samhain and Jack o' Lantern

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

The Christian celebration of Halloween (holy evening), like its predecessor, the pagan Celtic festival of Samhain, is that liminal time of year when the boundary between the worlds of the living and the dead become thin. For our ancestors, that's when ghosts and spirits needed to be propitiated with offerings of crops, milk and wine. Today, these ancient customs from Ireland, Scotland and Wales (bastions of Celtic heritage) are mirrored by such modern counterparts as Mexico's Dia de los Muertos, (Day of the Dead), when people leave food and drink at the graves of family members.

In pre-Christian Britain and Ireland, Samhain (pronounced SAH-win), literally "summer's end," marked the beginning of the winter season and — according to some historians — the start of the new year. Crops were brought in, cattle brought down from the hills, livestock slaughtered (as summer grass died), bonfires lit and precursors of modern trick-or-treaters went from house to house in costume demanding gifts in return for reciting poetry. Sound familiar?

The feast of All Hallows, or All Saints, was an attempt by the early church to lessen the importance of pagan festivals by substituting them with Christian holy days, like pegging Christmas to the time of the Roman solstice festival of Saturnalia. In the case of Samhain, in 835 AD, Pope Gregory IV designated Nov. 1 — the traditional date of Samhain — as All Saints Day.

And just as the Yule log reminds us of the pagan roots of Christmas, our carved candlelit pumpkin, the Jack o' Lantern, is born of an earlier tradition. The story goes that Jack was a ne'er-do-well hard drinker, whose misdeeds precluded happiness in the afterlife. Staggering home after a boozy night, Jack was ambushed by Old Nick himself. "Follow me to purgatory," he ordered. Jack complained that he would need a stick "from yonder sycamore" if he was to walk all the way to hell. Grudgingly, the Devil climbed the tree to break off a branch, at which Jack trapped him by quickly carving a cross in the bark. So a deal was struck: Jack would free him if Satan promised to not claim his soul. When Jack died, the Devil kept his word but instead tossed him a blazing lump of coal straight from the fires of hell. It being a cold night, Jack put the coal in a scooped-out turnip for warmth and light. And today, Jack and his lantern still roam between heaven and hell seeking a place to rest.

Somehow this old Irish story traveled to East Anglia, in England, where Jack o' Lantern became another name for Will o' the Wisp, the peasant name for ignis fatuus — foolish fire — the odd phenomenon of light appearing at night above marshy ground. It's not well understood but is probably caused by the spontaneous ignition of methane and phosphene from rotting vegetation. Ignis fatuus is rarely seen today, with the disappearance of both wetlands and the dark of night — have any readers seen it?

Immigrants from the Old World brought Halloween over to the U.S., where it caught on like wildfire, despite objections from the Puritans. As you light your pumpkin candle or give those pesky kids a handful of tooth-destroying candies, know that you're maintaining a custom whose origins come from long ago and far away. Happy Samhain!

Calling all landlords

The Greater Eureka Chamber of Commerce is hosting employees from the Department of Health & Human Services who will be available to answer questions about how the county works with landlords and people who are homeless.

Wednesday, Nov. 2 at 4 p.m.
2112 Broadway, Eureka

All landlords are welcome

It's a chance to visit with the county staff who work day to day with landlords and tenants. If you have units for rent or know of someone with one or two units, or more, let them know. This is a chance to meet the staff you would be working directly with if you rented to one of their clients.

For more information, call
Chamber Executive Director Don Smullins at 707-442-3738 or DHHS Program Manager
Jaclyn Culleton at DHHS 707-441-5526.
